

EASY-TO-HANDLE EPOXY

Epoxy cement is generally sold in tubes. Invariably it seems, they leak after several applications. They become so sticky that they may have to be discarded after 5 or 6 times of use.

Recently, a new brand of epoxy made its appearance. It is sold in small jelly-bean size containers that come in 2 colors, red and yellow. The directions call for cutting off the ends of one yellow and one red container, emptying their contents onto a flat surface, blending thoroughly for maximum strength and then using.

For my arts-and-crafts, and probably for your radio repairs, only a few drops of epoxy may be needed. I pierce the ends of the containers, squeeze out a few drops of each (equal quantity, of course) mix and use. I find that the "jelly bean" containers seal themselves at once, and you can use them over again. You must pierce them each time you use them, so keep a pin handy.

No fuss, no waste, no sticky fingers. — Lillian Queen R-E
